Parker Borage loves three things: magic, art, and chaos. Drawn to Scotland's magical history, she comes to Edinburgh on a study abroad program and is thrust into an unexpected, charmed destiny right out of her favorite storybooks.

Living with her new sister-witches in the city of her dreams, Parker is ready to take on any obstacle...even the annoyingly handsome college researcher who rejected her project and derailed her life plans, Nicolas Wellington.

Nicholas has always lived by a strict set of rules. With a little sister to raise, he's learned to be practical, and—in his expert opinion—magic and magical studies are nothing but a ridiculous waste of time. But when he's partnered up with a beautiful art student for an exhibit, he can't help but be enchanted. As the weather in Scotland turns extra gloomy, Parker's sunshine becomes harder for Nicholas to resist.

When the pair are continually thrown together in unexpected ways, it almost seems like Edinburgh itself is playing matchmaker. But with the secret of her magic becoming harder to keep hidden, can Parker trust her heart to the man who's so against everything she believes? Can Nicholas take the risk and embrace the unknown? Or are they doomed for to stay enemies forever?

 Perfect for fans of Practical Magic and The Very Secret Society of Irregular Witches, this cozy witchy romcom follows a sunshine art student and a hot skeptical researcher who's against magic, as they embark on a project that takes them all over the streets of Edinburgh.
