BOOK DESCRIPTION

Best. Pickup line. Ever.

Eli Winters wasn't expecting romance to strike between aisles of lumber and LED reindeer. He's just home for the Thanksgiving weekend, helping his sister with her bakery and trying not to drown in the town's over-the-top Christmas cheer. Then, in Home Depot's lighting section, a handsome stranger grabs his hand and says, "My ex just walked in—please, play along."

Before Eli can protest, they're strolling past garlands and wreaths like the world's most domestic couple. It's not until the stranger disappears that Eli realizes: there was no ex. Just the most ridiculous—and effective—pickup line ever.

Noah Carter didn't plan to lie. He's the town's perpetually cheerful event coordinator, always smiling, always "fine." But the truth is, the holidays have felt hollow for a long time. One impulsive moment in a hardware store changes everything.

When Eli's sister 'volunteers' him to help Noah organize the Christmas Festival, sparks turn into something deeper. Amid tangled lights, late-night cocoa, and small-town gossip, Eli and Noah discover that sometimes the best love stories start with a little pretending.

Because when it's Christmas—and your heart's finally ready—you don't just hold someone's hand.

You hold on.
