by Cerise DeLand

BOOK DESCRIPTION

She left him without a word. He would take her back in an instant...if he only knew where to find her.

Five years ago in a crowded Paris boulevard, Charles Winters scooped up Blythe Dandridge to save her from a runaway horse. He took her home, tended her scrapes and cuts—and showed her the true meaning of kindness. She promptly fell in love with him.

But war invaded their lives—and Charles had to leave France and planned to take Blythe Dandridge with him.

But as he stood for hours in the rain waiting for her, he realized he waited in vain.

Now in a crowded London street, Charles acts on instinct once again. He rushes out to save an older woman and a little girl. When he offers them tea, they insist on hosting him. The woman who comes to them to exclaim over the near catastrophe in the street is none other then Blythe.

The woman he loved in Paris is still alive. But she tells him she is about to marry a man whom Bessie Dove-Lyon has arranged for her.

Yet for a man who believes that all problems have good solutions, Charles will never believe that what he had in Paris was all he would ever have of the woman he loved.

Will Bessie bow to Charles's plan?

And can Charles find a way to save Blythe from the catastrophe that took her from him years ago?

Because he had always had lovely memories of Paris, but he knows that what he does now is right and good, and it will be today, and all their tomorrows.
