BOOK DESCRIPTION

I made up a girlfriend to make my grandmother happy. Then my car died, and the universe delivered one.

Marnie Castellano has a problem. Seven months ago, she told her enormous, interfering Italian family she was dating someone. Now Nonna's eightieth birthday is here, sixty relatives are expecting to meet the mystery woman, and Marnie is stranded at a Finger Lakes gas station with a dead Hyundai and absolutely no girlfriend.

Enter Jess Orlowski.

Tall, gorgeous, devastatingly competent, and currently getting dumped by text, Jess is an electrician with problems of her own. She's supposed to bring a girlfriend to her little brother's wedding and finally come out to her traditional Polish family.

One disastrous afternoon. Two women desperate for dates. A mutually beneficial arrangement.

Four days pretending at Nonna's lake house. One wedding the following weekend. Hand-holding, strategic kissing, and absolutely no real feelings.

Simple, right?

Except Marnie's family has no boundaries, Jess is dangerously good at playing the perfect girlfriend, and their shared bedroom has one very small bed and extremely thin walls.

Soon the fake kisses become real, the rules start falling apart, and neither woman knows how to admit that the biggest lie might be pretending they're not in love.

Because falling for your fake girlfriend is complicated.

Falling for the woman who's seen every part of you—and refuses to let you hide—is something else entirely.

Fake Girlfriend, Real Orgasms is a laugh-out-loud, high-heat sapphic romantic comedy featuring opposites attract, one-bed chaos, meddling families, explosive chemistry, emotional vulnerability, and a guaranteed happily ever after.
