Coaching Prince CharmingHe's my first and only crush. He's my new coach. Oh, and he was once my dad's teammate and best friend.

I've been in love with Nate Partridge since I can remember. Under my mattress, there has always been a stack of magazine covers with his bare torso and a pearly smile. But that's about the extent of it.

I can never have Nate Partridge. He is a straight guy and twenty years my senior. Neither of which is a dealbreaker for me, but he disagrees.

When a hockey accident forces him to retire, he takes the freshly vacant job of coaching the Arctic Titans. And my life takes an unexpected turn for the better.

Nate is the only person who has ever truly understood me. Where my father's ambition dictates my every waking moment, Nate's kindness and compassion make me feel like there's more to life than hockey. Dad's disregard for my passions makes Nate's encouragement only sweeter.

And my crush reaches all new heights. Especially when I discover his deepest secret.

Nate Partridge is not straight.

But do I stand a chance? To him, I am nothing more than his old friend's kid and a college freshman he's in charge of training.

If I want Nate Partridge, it will take more than hope to make this real.

It's time to shake things up in my life before I can make him mine.

Tempting the TeammateAndrei Sokolov has been my best friend for as long as I can remember.

We have played defense together since peewee hockey. We have been inseparable through every game, every road trip, and every bad decision.

Now we are back for our sophomore year at Northwood U, living in the same team house, chasing the same championship dreams, and stuck in the middle of a brand new mess.

The Arctic Titans have been turned into the stars of a season-long docu-series, and apparently, I am the Ladies' Man. Andrei is the Bad Boy Defenseman. We are supposed to play it up for the cameras, but being told who to be makes me itch. And when the edits start leaning into our so-called bromance, things get complicated.

Because lately, I cannot stop noticing the way Andrei looks at me when the cameras are not rolling. Or the way I have started looking back.

One kiss turns into a secret. A secret turns into late-night skates, empty locker rooms, and moments that feel too much like falling in love. And the closer we get, the harder it is to pretend it is just friendship.

Andrei says sneaking around costs him too much. I say I cannot risk losing what we already have. But with the whole world watching, I am running out of ways to hide what is real.

Maybe it's time to give them a storyline worth streaming.

Zero Pucks GivenSeth is the cutest enemy I've ever had to conquer.

Enemy might be the wrong word, but he's the younger brother of my high school nemesis, and now he's transferring to Northwood U.

A biology student with an adorable smile, Seth has never been easy to forget. We've had our share of summer flings. And we burned too fast to last.

My life is a mess of victories on ice and empty nights that blur together and taste like ash. I don't do love. I don't do mornings after. Whatever heart I had, I left it behind the day Seth and I walked away.

But his return throws me off balance. His brother is watching, but that doesn't stop us from falling right back into the madness of passion. It's like it has never gone away.

The moment I see him again, I know I'm already lost. What used to be a summer mistake is about to destroy my rules.

And it might just save me, too.
